

C-SPAN Brings America's Leading Political Call-In Show to Primetime, Giving More Americans a Voice in the National Conversation

Washington Journal Primetime launches Monday, November 9, giving Americans a voice in a LIVE conversation about the day's news each weeknight

WASHINGTON, DC (November 2, 2026) – Following the midterm elections, C-SPAN will bring its signature viewer-driven conversation to the evening with the launch of Washington Journal Primetime on Monday, November 9. Hosted by Mimi Geerges, the new live weeknight program will invite Americans to discuss the issues shaping the country with journalists, policy experts and other guests.

Building on C-SPAN's longstanding morning call-in program, Washington Journal Primetime will explore the day's biggest news, debates on Capitol Hill and what Washington's decisions mean for the public. Viewers will be at the heart of the program, asking questions, sharing their experiences and bringing perspectives from across the country to a live conversation about the issues that matter most to them.

The morning Washington Journal will continue to air live every day from 7 to 10 a.m. ET on C-SPAN.

"C-SPAN has long provided a place for Americans to ask questions, share their views and hear from one another," said C-SPAN CEO Sam Feist. "With Washington Journal Primetime, we're bringing that conversation to the evening—and opening the door for more Americans to take part. As the country looks ahead from the midterm elections, it's an especially meaningful time to hear from the public and explore the issues together."

Geerges, a host and producer for Washington Journal, joined C-SPAN in 2022 as a guest host and has become a familiar presence on the morning program. She previously served as a host and executive producer for Government Matters Media and SiriusXM Radio.

Washington Journal Primetime will air on C-SPAN and will also be available on C-SPAN.org, C-SPAN Radio and the C-SPAN Now app.
